

TSFLC3

THE THIRD
TUNISIAN SYSTEMIC FUNCTIONAL
LINGUISTICS CONFERENCE

Social change and periphery voices in SFL and related theories

22-23-24 March 2027

Hammamet, Tunisia

We are pleased to invite submissions for the 3rd Tunisian Systemic Functional Linguistics Conference (TSFLC 3). This edition focuses on the role of SFL in understanding and shaping social change, particularly through perspectives emerging from the margins and peripheries in diverse semiotic and social practices.

Systemic Functional Linguistics sees language as a social semiotic act that not only maintains and supports the existing eco-social order, but also “nudg[es] it in the directions in which that eco-social order is going to change” (Halliday, 2013, p. 36). As an inclusive theory grounded in the relationship between meaning and context, SFL offers powerful tools that help understand how power and meaning are distributed between a dominant center and a marginalized periphery and how social change can be initiated by marginalized groups. This relationship is fractal in nature and appears across different strata of SFL theory. For example, we observe it in the experiential grammar, where the “nuclear” Process is distinguished from an expanding circle of peripheral circumstances and where participants are either central or marginal (Halliday & Matthiessen, 2014). It is likewise apparent in interpersonal meanings through Appraisal and the modelling of evaluation, heteroglossia, solidarity, stance, and (dis)alignment as resources for construing audiences and collectivities (Martin & White, 2005).

The dynamics of center and margin can also be observed within the textual dimensions, enabling us to make sense of how information is prioritized through Thematization (Berry, 2013) and how different semiotic modes (visuals vs. text) negotiate special arrangements, centrality vs. satellites, or degrees of salience (Wegener, forthcoming; Zappavigna, 2026). In the social distribution of meaning, institutional power validates central ways of meaning while treating others as socially peripheral (Hasan, 2009). Meanwhile, within the tension of Individuation, the specific “repertoire” of the individual voice must constantly negotiate its alignment with, or opposition to, the “reservoir” of the community culture (Bernstein, 2000). Comparable semiotic pressures are now extending into human-AI interactions, giving rise to major controversies about AI roles and biases. In this era marked by rapid social and technological transformations, the rise of marginalized voices and the growing emphasis on individual agency, we contend that mainstream SFL along with SFL-aligned frameworks and methodologies can offer valuable tools for understanding and interpreting these shifts.

Against this backdrop, this conference invites contributions that explore, extend, or challenge these perspectives. Contributions can take the form of paper presentations, panels/colloquia, posters, and workshops pertaining, but not restricted, to the following themes:

THEMES

- Individualism and collectivism in theories, social and digital contexts and research methods
- The center and periphery/margin in theories, social contexts and research methods
- SFL and meaning making across human and non-human interactions
- SFL and multimodality
- SFL and Ecolinguistics
- SFL and transdisciplinary theories and methods
- SFL and professional, institutional and specialized discourses and contexts
- SFL, translanguaging, multilingualism and language policies
- SFL and translation
- SFL and decolonization
- SFL and educational applications
- SFL and individuals with specific (dis)abilities
- SFL and usage-based approaches to language learning and teaching
- SFL, texts and corpora

PLENARY SPEAKERS

- Anne McCabe
Saint Louis University, Madrid
- John Bateman
Bremen University, Germany
- Sadok Dammak
Sfax University, Tunisia
- Serge Sharoff
Leeds University, UK
- Stella Newmann
RWTH Aachen University, Germany

IMPORTANT DATES

- ◆ Submission Start Date
7 September 2026
- ◆ Submission Deadline
26 November 2026
- ◆ Notification of Acceptance
5 December 2026
- ◆ Early Bird Registration
5 Jan–5 Feb 2027
- ◆ Regular Registration
6 Feb–6 Mar 2027

STAY CONNECTED

www.syflat.org/tsflc3

tsflc3@syflat.org

@SyflatTunisia

Systemic Functional
Linguistics Association of Tunisia SYFLAT